1882.

Great England put her armor by, and stretched Her stately limbs to slumber in the sun. The nations, seeing then how long she slept. Communed together, and in whispers said : "Lo! she is old and tired; let us steal The crown from off her brows. She will not know! And Goneril and Regan, over seas, Mocking her, cried: "Her time is past. Her blood Is sluggish, and her rusted sword from out Her-scabbard she will draw no more!" And so. Thus gibing, thing with cruel hands the seeds Of discord and of hate amidst her sons. But from the East there came a blast too loud. As from the West there came a taunt too much And she, awaking, raised her head, and saw Around her all her faithless friends, and all Her sisters and her children jeering her. And crying, "She is old!" and meting out Her lands amongst themselves, and parcelling Her honor. Then, swift as lightning flashes

"Our Continent"

Is the rather high-sounding title of the most noteworthy American publication commenced during the present year. Like H rper's it began its career as a modest but unusually well printed semi-illustrated weekly, and like its older rival, promises to ecome a popular illustrated record of the times. Its engravings are finely executed Commissioner of Deeds for the States of New York and beautiful specimens of the new American style of the engraving art, of which the Ce tury and Harper's Magazines are examples. It is published in Philadelphia, and edited by Judge Tougee, the noted author of "A Fool's Errand" and other recent-works, assisted by a corps of wellknown writers, including ladies. A pleasant feature of this paper is the custom of attaching the name of the writer to every article published in it-a custom which is deservedly becoming more popular, and gives to each the credit that belongs to him for whatever merit his work may possess. A writer's pen is his tool, and his ideas constitute his stock in trade; and if they possess any value, he is entitled to it. "Impersonal journalism" may serve its purpose better than any other in one branch of the profession-that of a daily political news-paper, that aims to reflect, crystalize and enforce public opinion; but in the other-the literary-the name of the writer carries weight, and secures attention just in proportion as his reputation merits it.

During thirty years' experience in journalistic life, we have never read a weekly periodical, which so fully comes up to our conception of what a home paper should be, as does Our Continent. Its editorials on current topics of the day are short, terse and convincing; its serials chaste, entertaining, and well-illustrated, while the departments assigned to the Household-Peronals-Society-Home Adornment-Architecture-Horticulture-Humor, &c., are each presided over by an assistant and abound with good things. It is one of the few papers of its class that contain short religious selections from current literature, under the head of "The Still Hour." which are like grains of gold scattered along the pathway of life, worth stopping to secure and treasure up, and will make it more acceptable in many families. One depart-ment we miss-Current News Items-condensed into a column or so, which would add much to its value with some.

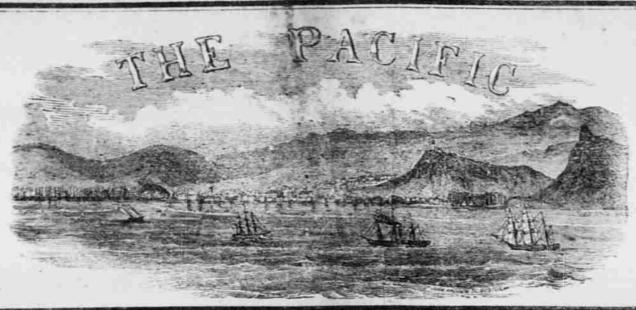

Nor have we ever seen a weekly which contained in each issue so many original Ideas and choice thoughts, calculated to leave an impression on the reader, as does this. It is a feature that must attract notice, and ensure its permanency as a popular favorite. We had marked several articles as worthy of copying, but our readers must be content with one extract from an article on The Press and National Character, illustrating the influence of the press, aided by-the telegraph, in awakening universal thought and sympathy:

"The daily newspaper and the electric telegraph are the apostles of a broad and charitable manhood. They speak fearlessly and tirelessly of the need and sufferings of the world. They confront us with our brothers and neighbors, trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific. In the morning, ere we have devoutly uttered "Give us this day our daily bread," and "Deliver us from evil," we have looked into the faces of the hunger-bitten and the evil-stricken of the two hemispheres. This familiarity with the life of the great world tends to stimulate the nobler qualities of moral character. It binds us strongly, though unconsciously, to the universal man." The voic of the printing-press is the voice of God, bidding Anglo-Saxons do for others what they have done for themselves. It tells the struggles and calamities of the far East, of Europe, Asia and Africa. As we listen, the subtle kinship of human nature responds. Who stops to think that the exiles in the quarries of Siberia and Selays? Or who waits to trace the descent of the Russian refugees to Shem? Celt or Teuton, Cossaek or Chinese, African or Asiatic, he who struggles and suffers is first, last, always, -A MAN."

[COMMUNICATED.] I am sorry to observe & spirit of unfair partizanship in the discussion of the liquor question, especially in regard to the effect of the removal of the tabu on the use of intoxicating spirits by natives. Now as all parties are presumed to regard excessive use of intoxicating drinks by any one as deplorable, it would reasonably be expected that all good citizens would rejoice to know that natives had not abused a privilege, had used certain drinks in moderation, and were not proceeding rapidly on the on the downward way to ruin. But we regret to observe that persons avowdedly anxious for publie welfare are also auxious to declars and prove that the native is abusing his privilege, and is persistently destroying himself. I simply wish to publish facts; I have taken some pains to get information in regard to native habits in the use of drinks at this time. The concentrence of testimony is that the consumption of lispeers by natives is not now as great as before the repeal of the prohibitory law which affected there, I know that the saloon keepers complain that their sales and profits are less under the new law. The best proof in the matter will be afforded in the returns of the Custom House during the twelve months ensuing after the Ist October, and if it is shown that the amount of liquor going into consumption has declined or increased (with consideration, however, of probable increase of population) then can be seen whether a law of prohibition or one of reasonable license is more favorable to the temperance EQUALITY.
